INFORMATIVE MOTION

TO THE HONORABLE BOARD:

COMES NOW, Hospital Menonita de Guayama, Inc., ("the Hospital"), through its undersigned attorney, and respectfully informs this Honorable Board as follows:

1. The date for filing Cross Exceptions and supporting briefs to the Administrative Law Judge decision in the above mentioned cases as well as Answering Brief to the Hospital Cross Exceptions was extended until September 23, 2019.

2. Counsel for General Counsel filed its Cross Exceptions and supporting Brief as well as the answering Brief on September 23, 2019.

3. Counsel for the Charging Party to our knowledge on said date had not filed an answering Brief or Cross Exceptions and Brief in support since we were not notified of any filing made by the Charging Party on the due date.

4. On October 1st, 2019, we called Attorney Harold Hopkins to advice him that we would be filing a Request for Extension of Time to file answer to General Counsel's Cross Exceptions and Brief in Support of Cross Exceptions to Administrative Law Judge and inquire whether he would be in agreement to said request. He advised that he would be in agreement and informed us that he was going to file an amended submission because there had been certain documents missing from its original filing and adviced that he would be doing that on Thursday October 3rd, 2019. I requested from him to forward the document previously filed by him. As of this date we have not received them.

5. On October 1st, 2019, the undersigned also spoke with Attorney Celeste Hilerio concerning our intent to file an Extension of Time request and to establish the position of the Region concerning same. After discussing our request with Region Officers she advised us that the Region would also agree. I asked her whether the Charging Party had filed Cross Exceptions and Answering Brief and she indicated that they had done so. I requested from her during the call if she could forward to my email what had been filed by the Charging Party. Later on she advised us that in accordance with the Regions procedure she could not serve documents filed by the Charging Party on the Hospital.

6. On October 3, 2019 at 6:27pm, the undersigned received an email addressed to Attorney Celeste Hilerio Echevarria, Harold Hopkins, Attorney Angel Muñoz Noya and Iris Ramos at their corresponding email address. We include as Exhibit 1 of this motion said email and documents included therein. The documents included in the email are the first page of a document titled Charging Party Cross Exceptions to ALJ Decision, the first page of the document titled Second Joint Motion and Stipulation of Documents....,the decision in the case of UNICCO Service Company, one page of what is titled Charging Party Opposition to Respondent's Exceptions to ALJ Decision and page two through fourteen from another document.

7. Today we entered the docket of these cases at the NLRB site and were able to obtain copies of the documents filed by Charging Parting on September 23, 2019. The documents we printed from the Docket are the following: a document titled Charging Party Brief to ALJ containing 15 pages, the first page of a document titled Charging Party Cross Exceptions to ALJ Decision, a two page document apparently of an article and the decision of the case of UGL-UNICCO Service. Notwithstanding we did not see in the docket the filing of the documents that were sent by email by the Charging Party mentioned in paragraph 3 above.

8. As of this date we do not have a complete version of the documents that the Charging Party may have been trying to file.

9. Section 102.113 and 102.114 state the service requirements on documents filed before the Board. Since the Hospital or Respondent were not served by the Charging Party of the documents filed by them on September 23, 2019, we request that either this Honorable Board reject the Cross Exceptions and Answering Brief filed by them or if not at the discretion of the Board order that the documents be fully served by the Charging Party and that computation of all time periods run from the date of service.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully requested that this Honorable Board takes note of the above and that either this Honorable Board rejects the Cross Exceptions and Answering Brief filed by the Charging Party or if not at the discretion of the Board order that the documents be served on the Hospital by the Charging Party and that computation of all time periods for the filing of additional documents in this case run from the date of service.

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED.

DECISION ON REVIEW AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN LIEBMAN AND MEMBERS BECKER, PEARCE, AND HAYES

The issue in this case is whether the Board should restore the "successor bar" doctrine, discarded in MV Transportation, 337 NLRB 770 (2002). Under that doctrine, when a successor employer acts in accordance with its legal obligation to recognize an incumbent representative of its employees, the previously chosen representative is entitled to represent the employees in collective bargaining with their new employer for a reasonable period of time, without challenge to its representative status. St. Elizabeth Manor, Inc., 329 NLRB 341 (1999).

As we explain in Lamons Gasket, 357 NLRB No. 72 (2011), also decided today, analogous "bar" doctrines are well established in labor law, based on the principle that "a bargaining relationship once rightfully established must be permitted to exist and function for a reasonable period in which it can be given a fair chance to succeed." Franks Bros. Co. v. NLRB, 321 U.S. 702, 705 (1944). These bar doctrines—including the "certification bar,"[1] and the "voluntary recognition bar,"[2]—promote a primary goal of the National Labor Relations Act by stabilizing labor-management relationships and so promoting collective bargaining, without interfering with the freedom of employees to periodically select a new representative or reject representation.[3]

Successorship situations, the byproduct of corporate mergers, acquisitions, and other similar transactions, have become increasingly common in the last three decades.[4] And, as the Supreme Court has explained, regulatory agencies like the Board "are supposed, within the limits of the law and of fair and prudent administration, to adapt their rules and practices to the Nation's needs in a volatile changing economy." American Trucking Assns. v. Atchison T. & S.F. Ry. Co., 387 U.S. 397, 416 (1967). We are persuaded that restoring the "successor bar" doctrine better achieves the overall policies of the Act, in the context of today's economy, than does the approach of MV Transportation, supra, which has its origins in a bygone era and which fails to come to terms with the practical and legal dynamics of labor-law successorship.

However, while we reverse MV Transportation, we do not simply return to the rule of St. Elizabeth Manor, supra. Instead, we modify the "successor bar" doctrine announced there, to mitigate its potential impact on employees who might wish to change representatives or reject representation altogether. First, we define, for two different situations, the "reasonable period of bargaining" mandated by the "successor bar" doctrine. Second, we modify the "contract bar" doctrine to address a prospect raised in MV Transportation: that a challenge to the incumbent union's majority status by employees or by a rival union might be precluded for an unduly long period, should insulated periods based on the successor bar and the contract-bar doctrines run together.

I.

On August 27, 2010, the Board granted the Intervenor's request for review in this case, which asked the Board to reconsider MV Transportation and to return to the "successor bar" doctrine set forth in St. Elizabeth Manor, 355 NLRB 762. The case was consolidated for purposes of decision-making with Grocery Haulers, Inc., Case 03–RC–011944.[5]

A.

On August 31, 2010, the Board issued a notice and invitation to file briefs, inviting the parties and amici to address some or all of the following questions:

> (1) Should the Board reconsider or modify MV Transportation?
> (2) How should the Board treat the "perfectly clear" successor situation as defined by NLRB v. Burns [Inn-

[1] See Ray Brooks v. NLRB, 348 U.S. 96 (1954).

[2] See Lamons Gasket, supra.

[3] The Board also precludes any challenge to a representative's status for a reasonable period of time, after the Board has issued a bargaining order against an employer, as a remedy for unfair labor practices. See Lee Lumber & Building Material Corp., 334 NLRB 399 (2001).

[4] See MV Transportation, supra, 337 NLRB at 783–784 (appendices A & B to dissent) (table reflecting number of mergers, divestitures, and disclosed value, 1968–2000, chart reflecting merger and acquisition dollar value as percentage of Gross Domestic Product, 1968–2000).

[5] Although Grocery Haulers, supra, was consolidated with this case because it also raises successor-bar issues, we have decided to sever Grocery Haulers from this case for separate consideration, given other issues presented there.

ternational] Security Services, 406 U.S. 272, 294–295 (1972), and subsequent Board precedent?

The parties were invited "to submit empirical and practical descriptions of their experience under MV Transportation."

The Council on Labor Law Equality (COLLE) and the National Right to Work Legal Defense and Education Foundation have filed amicus briefs urging the Board to continue to apply MV Transportation, as did the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) and affiliated trade associations.[6]

Professor Kenneth G. Dau-Schmidt, the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), SEIU United Long Term Care Workers, Local 6434, and the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL–CIO) have filed amicus briefs urging the Board to overrule MV Transportation.

The Intervenor in this case, Firemen and Oilers Chapter 3, Local 615, SEIU, as well as the intervenor in Grocery Haulers, supra, Bakery, Confectionary, Tobacco Workers and Grain Millers, Local 50, have also argued for overruling MV Transportation.

Petitioner Area Trades Council filed a brief arguing that if MV Transportation were overruled, the Board's decision should be applied only prospectively.

B.

The only issue presented in this case is whether to adhere to MV Transportation. No issues were litigated at the hearing before the Regional Director, who applied MV Transportation, and accordingly ordered an election, based on the petition filed by the Area Trades Council.

For purposes of our decision, we accept the facts of this case as stated in the offer of proof made by Intervenor Firemen and Oilers at the hearing. The Employer, UGL-UNICCO Service Company, a successor employer, is a maintenance contractor at various locations throughout Massachusetts, including the State Street Bank facilities in Quincy, Boston, Back Bay, Westborough, and Grafton. The Petitioner, Area Trades Council, seeks to represent 33 employees in the stipulated unit, found appropriate by the Regional Director, of building engineering and maintenance employees employed at the State Street Bank facilities.

For over 20 years, Intervenor Firemen and Oilers had represented employees employed by the Employer's predecessor, Building Technologies, Inc. (BTE) at the locations involved in this case, under successive collective-bargaining agreements. The most recent such agreement was effective from April 23, 2007, to April 19, 2010. The Employer notified the Intervenor on February 27, 2010, that it was assuming BTE's operations and that it intended to offer employment to bargaining unit employees then working. (Ultimately, 32 of BTE's 33 employees were hired.) On March 5, 2010, the Employer and the Intervenor executed an agreement covering initial terms and conditions of employment and adopting (as modified) the remaining 29 days of the agreement between the Intervenor and BTE. The Employer and the Intervenor were in the process of negotiating a new collective-bargaining agreement until the petition in this case was filed on April 23, 2010.

II.

This case is best understood in its larger legal context, which includes both successorship doctrine and bar doctrines, as well as the Board's evolving—and contradictory—jurisprudence with respect to the issue presented here.

A.

The basic rules of labor-law successorship, as developed by the Supreme Court and by the Board, are well established.[7] A new employer is a successor to the old—and thus required to recognize and bargain with the incumbent labor union—when there is "substantial continuity" between the two business operations and when a majority of the new company's employees had been employed by the predecessor. See Fall River Dyeing Corp. v. NLRB, 482 U.S. 27, 42–44, 46–47 (1987). The successor is not, however, required to adopt the existing collective-bargaining agreement between the predecessor and the union. NLRB v. Burns Security Services, 406 U.S. 272, 287–291 (1972). Rather, except in situations where it is "perfectly clear that the new employer plans to retain all of the employees in the [bargaining] unit," the successor is free to set initial terms and conditions of employment unilaterally, without first bargaining with the union. Burns, supra, 406 U.S. at 294–295.[8]

Under current law, the change in employers does not affect the presumption that the union continues to enjoy majority support, which is rebuttable 1 year after the union has been certified by the Board. Fall River, supra, 482 U.S. at 36–41. The Fall River Court observed that the presumption is based on the "overriding policy" of the National Labor Relations Act, "industrial peace." Id. at 38. The presumption "further[s] this policy by 'promot[ing] stability in collective bargaining relationships without impairing the free choice of employees.'" Id. As the Court explained, the "rationale behind the presumptions is particularly pertinent in the successorship situation," because "[d]uring a transition between employers, a union is in a peculiarly vulnerable position." Id. at 39. Among other things, "[i]t has no formal and established bargaining relationship with the new employer." Id.

In turn, the "position of the employees" also calls for applying the presumption of majority support. 482 U.S. at 39. The Fall River Court observed that:

> [A]fter being hired by a new company following a layoff from the old, employees initially will be concerned primarily with maintaining their new jobs. In fact, they might be inclined to shun support for their former union, especially if they believe that such support will jeopardize their jobs with the successor or if they are inclined to blame the union for their layoff and problems associated with it. Without the presumptions of majority support and with the wide variety of corporate transformations possible, an employer could use a successor enterprise as a way of getting rid of a labor contract and of exploiting the employees' hesitant attitude towards the union to eliminate its continuing presence.

Id. at 40 (emphasis added; footnote omitted).

B.

A bar creates a conclusive presumption of majority support for a defined period of time, preventing any challenge to the union's status, whether by the employer's unilateral withdrawal of recognition from the union or by an election petition filed with the Board by the employer, by employees, or by a rival union. As explained, the Board has imposed bars in a variety of contexts, with judicial approval.[9] They are based on the principle that, in the Supreme Court's words, "a bargaining relationship once rightfully established must be permitted to exist and function for a reasonable period in which it can be given a fair chance to succeed." Franks Bros. Co. v. NLRB, supra at 702 (upholding Board's issuance of bargaining order to remedy employer's unlawful refusal to bargain with union, despite union's intervening loss of majority support).

In Keller Plastics Eastern, Inc., 157 NLRB 583, decided in 1966, the Board applied this principle in the context of voluntary recognition. The "recognition bar" rule of Keller Plastics was a fixture of Board law for more than 40 years, until it was substantially modified by the Board in Dana, supra, which has now been overruled by the Board. See Lamons Gasket, supra.

C.

With little, if anything, in the way of rationale, the Board in Southern Moldings, Inc., 219 NLRB 119 (1975), rejected the application of the "recognition" bar in the successorship context, permitting a decertification petition to proceed. Our case law since then has reflected what a leading scholar of the Board refers to generally as "policy oscillation."[10]

In Landmark International Trucks,[11] a unanimous 1981 unfair labor practice decision, the Board cited Keller Plastics in finding that a successor employer who had voluntarily recognized the union was prohibited from withdrawing recognition before a reasonable period of bargaining had elapsed.[12]

Landmark was reversed by Harley-Davidson Co., 273 NLRB 1531 (1985). Adopting the view of the Sixth Circuit, which had refused to enforce the Landmark decision, the unanimous Harley-Davidson Board rejected the analogy between the voluntary recognition and successorship situations, citing two differences. First, the bargaining relationship created by successorship is not voluntary, but legally imposed. Second, while successorship involves a new bargaining relationship between the union and the successor employer, the union has a preexisting relationship with at least a majority of the successor's employees. 273 NLRB at 1532. (Harley-Davidson was cited by the Supreme Court in Fall River, supra, but only in the course of describing existing Board law. 482 U.S. at 41 fn. 8.)

[8] See Spruce Up Corp., 209 NLRB 194 (1974) (establishing Board's current "perfectly clear" successorship test)

[11] 257 NLRB 1375 (1981), enf. denied in pertinent part 699 F.2d 815 (6th Cir. 1983)

[12] The Landmark Board could "discern no principle that would support distinguishing a successor employer's bargaining obligation based on voluntary recognition of a majority union from any other employer's duty to bargain for a reasonable period." 257 NLRB at 1375 fn. 4

In St. Elizabeth Manor, supra, a 1999 decision, the Board reinstated the "successor bar." Rejecting the rationale of Harley-Davidson (and the Sixth Circuit in Landmark), the Board found crucial similarities between voluntary recognition and successorship, including the creation of a new collective-bargaining relationship between the union and the successor employer. 329 NLRB at 343. Drawing on the analysis of the Supreme Court in Fall River, supra, the Board described the "successor bar" as "intended to protect the newly established bargaining relationship and the previously expressed majority choice, taking into account that the stresses of the organizational transition may have shaken some of the support the union previously enjoyed." Id. at 345.

The St. Elizabeth Manor Board rejected the view, taken by the dissenting Board members, that the "successor bar" gave too little weight to employee freedom of choice, which it recognized as a "bedrock principle of the statute." 329 NLRB at 344. It cited the Board's contract-bar and certification bar doctrines as examples of similar attempts to strike a balance between the Act's sometimes competing policies of promoting stable collective-bargaining relationships and permitting employees periodically to freely choose or reject continued representation. Id. at 344–345. The crucial aspect of the balance struck by the "successor bar," the Board explained, was that the bar "extends for a 'reasonable period,' not in perpetuity." Id. at 346.

The rule announced in St. Elizabeth Manor was short-lived, surviving fewer than 3 years before it was reversed by a divided Board in MV Transportation, supra.[13] There, the Board concluded that the "successor bar" "promotes the stability of bargaining relationships to the exclusion of the employees' Section 7 rights to choose their bargaining representative." 337 NLRB at 773. The Board cited the possibility of a long period during which a union would be insulated from challenge, if the "contract bar" period under the predecessor employer was immediately followed by application of the "successor bar" and perhaps then another "contract bar," if the union and the new employer reached a collective-bargaining agreement. Id. Stability of bargaining relationships was sufficiently protected, the Board reasoned, by existing successorship rules requiring the new employer to recognize the incumbent union, absent evidence of a loss of majority support. Id. at 773–774. Embracing Southern Moldings, supra, the Board endorsed the distinction made there between the successorship situation and voluntary recognition: that the union has a preexisting relationship with the employees in the case of successorship. Id. at 774. The instability inherent in successorship situations might cause "anxiety" among employees, the Board acknowledged, but the impact on employees' support for the union was uncertain, and, regardless of the impact, the "fundamental statutory policy of employee free choice has paramount value, even in times of economic change." Id. at 775. Finally, the Board reasoned that other bar doctrines were simply not applicable in the successorship context. Id.

III.

As prior Boards have recognized, whether to establish a "successor bar" presents an important policy choice, a choice that cannot be resolved by parsing the words of the National Labor Relations Act, but which instead calls on the Board to consider the larger, sometimes competing, goals of the statute. Although the Board's decisions in St. Elizabeth Manor and in MV Transportation reached opposite conclusions, they agreed that the Board's proper task was to strike a balance between preserving employee freedom of choice and promoting stable collective-bargaining relationships.[14] That task is not always easy. Indeed, an observer might wonder why the MV Transportation Board did not simply leave well enough alone, or why we revisit the issue today, instead of adhering to precedent. But reevaluating doctrines, refining legal rules, and sometimes reversing precedent are familiar parts of the Board's work—and rightly so, as the Supreme Court has explained:

[13] Chairman (then-Member) Liebman dissented. 337 NLRB at 776 (dissent).

[14] See St. Elizabeth Manor, supra, 329 NLRB at 344, citing Stanley Spencer v. NLRB, 712 F.2d 539, 566 (D.C. Cir. 1983); MV Transportation, supra, 337 NLRB at 772, citing same decision.

Amicus National Right to Work Legal Defense and Education Foundation argues that the Act's "paramount policy of promoting the free, uncoerced choice of employees to select or reject union representation" (Br. at 4–5) is analytically prior and superior to any policy of promoting stability in collective-bargaining relationships. Taken to its logical conclusion, as we explain more fully in Lamons Gasket, that view actually undermines employees' free choice by denying its effect for even a reasonable period of time. Moreover, that view simply cannot be squared with Supreme Court precedent. E.g., Auciello Iron Works, Inc. v. NLRB, 517 U.S. 781, 785 (1996) ("The object of the National Labor Relations Act is industrial peace and stability, fostered by collective-bargaining agreements providing for the orderly resolution of labor disputes between workers and employers.")

> The use by an administrative agency of the evolutional approach is particularly fitting. To hold that the Board's earlier decisions froze the development . . . of the national labor law would misconceive the nature of administrative decisionmaking.
> . . . .
> "The constant process of trial and error . . . differentiates perhaps more than anything else the administrative from the judicial process."

NLRB v. J. Weingarten, Inc., 420 U.S. 251, 265 (1975), quoting NLRB v. Seven-Up Bottling Co. of Miami, 344 U.S. 344, 349 (1953).[15]

We disagree with the conclusion reached in MV Transportation, for reasons that we will explain. But we also disagree with the reflexively negative reaction of the MV Transportation Board to the possibility of doctrinal evolution. MV Transportation essentially sought to freeze the development of successorship doctrine as of 1975 (the year Southern Moldings was decided). The MV Transportation Board treated St. Elizabeth Manor as an aberration, when in fact our case law to that point had already wandered back-and-forth, in decisions that are notable for their lack of clear and detailed analysis. The better approach would have been to give the "successor bar" a fair trial, instead of declaring it error without analysis of its actual operation.

An "evolutional approach" (in the Supreme Court's phrase) to "successor bar" issues seems particularly prudent because the number and scale of corporate mergers and acquisitions has increased dramatically over the last 35 years. The St. Elizabeth Board recognized that fact,[16] as did the Board in MV Transportation,[17] where the majority remarked upon its failure "to see how this macroeconomic phenomenon should require, in any given successorship, that a particular unit of employees lose their right to choose to be represented or not."[18] 337 NLRB at 775. The significance of this "macroeconomic phenomenon," of course, is that it means much more is at stake in the Board's approach to successorship issues—and in getting it right. If transactions resulting in successorship are far more common, and if they indeed destabilize collective-bargaining relationships, then the need for the Board to evaluate its doctrines carefully, and to adjust them appropriately, is clear.[19]

IV.

There can be no doubt that, under existing law, the transition from one employer to another threatens to seriously destabilize collective bargaining, even when the new employer is required to recognize the incumbent union. The new employer is free to choose (on any nondiscriminatory basis) which of the predecessor's employees it will keep and which it will let go. It is also free to reject any existing collective-bargaining agreement. And it will often be free to establish unilaterally all initial terms and conditions of employment: wages, hours, benefits, job duties, tenure, disciplinary rules, and more. In a setting where everything that employees have achieved through collective bargaining may be swept aside, the union must now deal with a new employer and, at the same time, persuade employees that it can still effectively represent them. As the Supreme Court recognized in Fall River, supra, successorship places the union "in a peculiarly vulnerable position," just when employees "might be inclined to shun support for their former union." 482 U.S. at 39–40.

The question, then, is whether labor law's "overriding policy"—preserving "industrial peace" by "promot[ing] stability in collective bargaining relationships, without impairing the free choice of employees"[20]—is sufficient-

[15] The principle that a regulatory agency "must consider varying [statutory] interpretations and the wisdom of its policy on a continuing basis" is firmly established in modern administrative law. Chevron USA Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 863–864 (1984).

[16] 329 NLRB at 343 ("[M]ergers and acquisitions [are] commonplace, . . . with publicized downsizings, restructurings, and facility closings accompanying them . . .").

[17] 337 NLRB at 775 ("[T]he incidence of successorship in our economy has significantly increased since Southern Moldings."). A table and graph appended to the dissent in MV Transportation illustrate the phenomenon. Id. at 784–784. In 1975, merger and acquisition announcements numbered 2,297, with transactions valued at $11.8 billion (about 1 percent of Gross Domestic Product). In 2000, announcements numbered 9566, with transactions valued at $1.3 trillion (about 14 percent of GDP). See Paul A. Pautler, Evidence on Mergers and Acquisitions, Federal Trade Commission Working Paper 243 at 58, 50 (Table 1 & Figure 2) (Sept. 25, 2001) (available at www.ftc.gov/be/econwork.htm). Mergers and acquisitions dropped following 2000, only to rise again, peaking in 2007, before another decline, which now seems over. United States merger and acquisition volume in 2010 was $822 billion. See Michael J. De La Merced & Jeffrey Cane, Confident Deal Makers Pulled Out Checkbooks in 2010, N.Y. Times (Jan. 3, 2011); Frank Aquila, Conditions Are Ripe for an M & A Boom in 2011, Bloomberg Business Week (Dec. 22, 2010). The contrast with the mid-1970s remains stark.

[18] A "successor bar" hardly means that employees "lose their right to choose," any more than do employees represented by a newly-certified union, a union that has been voluntarily recognized, a union that has negotiated a collective-bargaining agreement, or a union that has had its bargaining rights enforced by a Board order remedying an employer's unlawful refusal to bargain. After all, Congress itself created the certification bar in Sec. 9(c)(3).

[19] Indeed, amici on both sides of this case cite these changes in economic activity. For example, Amicus Council on Labor Law Equality, argues that the "expansion of merger and acquisition activity over the past few decades is all the more reason" to adhere to current law. Amicus Br. at 8. We address that argument below.

ly promoted by only a rebuttable presumption that the union continues to enjoy support, which may be overcome at any time, permitting an employer to withdraw recognition from the union unilaterally, a rival union to file a representation petition, or employees to file a decertification petition. In our view, reinstituting the "successor bar" doctrine, with appropriate modifications, best serves the policies of the National Labor Relations Act. We accordingly reverse MV Transportation.

A.

We see no obstacle to our decision in the Supreme Court's rulings. The MV Transportation Board asserted that the Court, in Fall River, "endorsed the Board's position in Harley-Davidson," supra, rejecting the "successor bar." 337 NLRB at 771. That assertion reads far too much into a single footnote of the Court's decision.

The holding of Fall River was "that a successor's obligation to bargain is not limited to a situation where the union in question has been recently certified," but rather that "[w]here . . . the union has a rebuttable presumption of majority status, this status continues despite the change in employers." 482 U.S. at 41. In the course of reaching its holding, the Court described existing Board law at the time (1987), noting:

> If, during negotiations, a successor questions a union's continuing majority status, the successor "may lawfully withdraw from negotiation at any time following recognition if it can show that the union had in fact lost its majority status at the time of the refusal to bargain or that the refusal to bargain was grounded on a good-faith doubt based on objective factors that the union continued to command majority support." Quoting Harley-Davidson, supra, 273 NLRB 1531 (1985).

Id. at fn. 8.

This was merely a description of the legal landscape at the time,[21] i.e., the legal consequences of the holding in Burns, not a part of the Court's holding to extend Burns beyond the context of recent certification. At most, the footnote implies that the rule of Harley-Davidson was a permissible interpretation of the statute. But it does not suggest that the Board cannot adopt a different view.[22] As the Fall River Court went on to explain, the Board "is given considerable authority to interpret the provisions of the [National Labor Relations Act]," and "[i]f the Board adopts a rule that is rational and consistent with the Act, . . . then the rule is entitled to deference from the courts." Id. at 42.[23] That principle remains applicable when the Board changes its rules. See, e.g., Weingarten, supra, 420 NLRB at 265. See also National Cable, supra, 545 U.S. at 981–982 (explaining that Chevron deference applies when administrative agencies adequately explain reasons for reversal of policy).

B.

In line with St. Elizabeth Manor, we believe that the new "bargaining relationship . . . rightfully established" through an employer's compliance with successorship requirements "must be permitted to exist and function for a reasonable period in which it can be given a fair chance to succeed." Franks Bros., supra, 321 U.S. at 705. Under Board law, the same principle applies across a variety of settings, including the setting most like successorship: voluntary recognition of the union by the employer. The Board has now reaffirmed the "recognition bar," restoring a longstanding doctrine, first established in 1966. See Lamons Gasket, supra.

The MV Transportation Board distinguished successorship from voluntary recognition on the basis of the union's preexisting relationship with employees. 337 NLRB at 774. That distinction, however, does not come to terms with the basic fact of the successorship situation: that the bargaining relationship is an entirely new [21] The Board's rules for how a union's rebuttable presumption of majority support may be overcome have changed since Harley-Davidson, supra. Employers may no longer withdraw recognition from a union based simply on a "good-faith doubt" that the union has lost majority support, rather, an actual loss of support must be proven. See Levitz Furniture Co. of the Pacific, 333 NLRB 717 (2001).

[22] The Supreme Court has explained that a "court's prior judicial construction of a statute trumps an agency construction otherwise entitled to Chevron deference only if the prior court decision holds that its construction follows from the unambiguous terms of the statute and thus leaves no room for agency discretion." National Cable & Telecommunications Assn. v. Brand X Internet Services, 545 U.S. 967, 982 (2005), citing Chevron USA Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837 (1984). Even if the footnote in Fall River describing existing Board doctrine could be understood as a holding, it certainly was not a holding that the then existing doctrine "follows from the unambiguous terms of the statute and thus leaves no room for agency discretion."

[23] For these reasons, we reject the argument of amicus Council on Labor Law Equality, endorsed by our dissenting colleague, that the "application of a 'successor bar' would be contrary to the Supreme Court's expectations when it developed the law of successorship in Burns and Fall River Dyeing." Amicus Brief at p. 7. Similarly, although our dissenting colleague is correct that the Court in Burns noted that holding a successor bound to the terms of its predecessor's contract would prevent withdrawal or recognition based on a good-faith doubt of majority support "during the time that the contract is a bar," 406 U.S. at 290 fn. 12, imposition of a successor bar has no such effect and the successor remains free under our decision today not to adopt the predecessor's contract or agree to a new contract so long as it bargains in good faith for a reasonable period of time. Had the Supreme Court held that, in the successorship context, unions were not entitled to even a rebuttable presumption of majority support, then the Board presumably would not be free to adopt a "bar" doctrine. But the Court held otherwise, and nothing in Fall River or Burns precludes the Board from instituting a "successor bar."

one. Moreover, as the Fall River Court recognized, the new relationship will often begin in a context where everything that the union has accomplished in the course of the prior bargaining relationship (including, of course, a contract) is at risk, if not already eliminated. This is, emphatically, a new bargaining relationship that should be given a reasonable chance to succeed. In the face of a clear demonstration of the union's inability to protect the status quo—a task made very difficult by successorship law—its preexisting relationship with employees would seem to be a secondary consideration for employees. Indeed, the Fall River Court observed that employees might "be inclined to shun support" for the union, whether from fear of the new employer or anger with the union. 482 U.S. at 40. The MV Transportation Board took a different view in arguing that the "environment of uncertainty and anxiety" created by successorship might well make employees more, not less, likely to support the union. 337 NLRB at 775. That view, which finds no support elsewhere in current law, seems implausible to us, because it supposes that employees will look for help to a source that has failed to protect them.[24]

Because the destabilizing consequences of a successorship transaction for collective bargaining are themselves, in part, a function of successorship doctrine, it seems reasonable for the law to seek to mitigate those consequences, as a "successor bar" does.

The MV Transportation Board also asserted that permitting a challenge to the union's status is not destabilizing and, indeed, that an insulated period itself aggravates instability, if most employees no longer support the union. 337 NLRB at 774. We disagree. The stability that the Act seeks to preserve is the stability of the existing collective-bargaining relationship, which an insulated period obviously protects. Employee support for the union may well fluctuate during the period following successorship, as it does during other, similar insulated periods, and a successor bar may, in turn, prevent changes in employee sentiment being given effect through an employee petition to the employer or through a Board election. But such fluctuations in employee sentiment are not inconsistent with stable bargaining so long as employees have a periodic opportunity to change or revisit their representation.

The Board's presumptions regarding union majority support, as the Supreme Court has observed, > address our fickle nature by "enabl[ing] a union to concentrate on obtaining and fairly administering a collective-bargaining agreement" without worrying about the immediate risk of decertification and by "remov[ing] any temptation on the part of the employer to avoid good-faith bargaining."

Auciello Iron Works, Inc. v. NLRB, 517 U.S. 781, 786 (1996), quoting Fall River, supra, 482 U.S. at 38. An insulated period for the union clearly promotes collective bargaining. It enables the union to focus on bargaining, as opposed to shoring up its support among employees, and to bargain without being "under exigent pressure to produce hothouse results or be turned out," pressure that can precipitate a labor dispute and surely does not make reaching agreement easier. Ray Brooks, supra, 348 U.S. at 100. An insulated period also increases the incentives for successor employers to bargain toward an agreement. "It is scarcely conducive to bargaining in good faith for an employer to know that, if he dillydallies or subtly undermines, union strength may erode and thereby relieve him of his statutory duties at any time, while if he works conscientiously toward agreement, the rank and file may, at the last moment, repudiate their agent." Id.[25]

Amicus Council on Labor Equality argues that a "successor bar may present an obstacle to mergers or acquisitions of business that are otherwise likely to fail without the transaction." Amicus Br. at 10. But given the wide latitude permitted successor employers to reject existing collective-bargaining agreements and to unilaterally establish initial terms and conditions of employment, we fail to see why the successor bar presents a serious obstacle to saving failing businesses. The flexibility sought by [24] Amicus Council on Labor Law Equality urges an additional distinction between voluntary recognition and successorship "that there typically has not been any recent demonstration of majority support in a successorship situation." Amicus Br. at 6.

The rationale for bar periods, however, like the rationale for the presumptions concerning union majority support in general, does not depend on how recently a majority of employees designated or selected the union to represent them. They turn, rather, on the policy goal of preserving and promoting stable bargaining relationships. See Fall River, supra, 482 U.S. at 38 (rejecting argument that presumption of majority support in successorship context should apply only when union was recently certified).

Amicus National Association of Manufacturers makes a similar argument that because employees chose union representation under the predecessor employer, they should be free to reject representation "[w]hen a new and different entity . . . becomes the employer with a different financial situation and management team." Br. at 13. That argument proves too much, for if the union's majority status could be challenged whenever the employer's financial situation or management team changed, bargaining stability would be illusory. In any case, of course, employees will have the opportunity to reject the incumbent union when the temporary "successor bar" expires.

[25] These observations square with the Board's experience, and they are supported by social science theory and experimentation, as Professor Dau-Schmidt argues in his amicus brief here, drawing in part on his own prior work. See Kenneth G. Dau-Schmidt, A Bargaining Analysis of American Labor Law and the Search for Bargaining Equity and Industrial Peace, 91 Mich. L. Rev. 419 (1992).

amicus Council was given to prospective buyers by the Supreme Court in Burns. The Council's argument thus suggests that some purchasers act in reliance on the absence of a successor bar in the expectation that the instability created by the purchase will induce their employees to withdraw support from their existing representative. The argument is in tension with the established law of successorship itself and does not support continued application of MV Transportation. Indeed, taken to its logical conclusion, it suggests Burns should be overruled.

Perhaps the strongest argument against a "successor bar" is the burden that it places on the Section 7 rights of employees, particularly when the bar prevents employees from filing an election petition with the Board, if less so when it prevents a successor employer from unilaterally withdrawing recognition from the union.[26] We agree with the St. Elizabeth Manor Board that "[e]mployee freedom of choice is . . . a bedrock principle of the statute." 329 NLRB at 344. We agree, as well, that a "successor bar," given the important statutory policies it serves, does not unduly burden employee free choice, because it extends (as do other insulated periods) only for a reasonable period of bargaining, which we further define below, "not in perpetuity." Id. at 346. To more appropriately balance the goals of bargaining stability and the principle of free choice, we take this occasion to refine the "successor bar" by defining the "reasonable period of bargaining" mandated by the bar and by modifying application of "contract bar" rules in successorship cases.

We adopt the basic statement of the "successor bar" rule essentially as articulated in St. Elizabeth Manor. The "successor bar" will apply in those situations where the successor has abided by its legal obligation to recognize an incumbent union, but where the "contract bar" doctrine is inapplicable, either because the successor has not adopted the predecessor's collective-bargaining agreement or because an agreement between the union and the successor does not serve as a bar under existing rules.[27] In such cases, the union is entitled to a reasonable period of bargaining, during which no question concerning representation that challenges its majority status may be raised through a petition for an election filed by employees, by the employer, or by a rival union; nor, during this period, may the employer unilaterally withdraw recognition from the union based on a claimed loss of majority support, whether arising before or during the period.

We will apply this new rule retroactively in representation proceedings, consistent with the Board's established approach.[28] The question of retroactivity in the context of an unfair labor practice proceeding is not presented here and may raise distinct issues.

Neither in St. Elizabeth Manor, nor in later cases applying the "successor bar," did the Board precisely define a "reasonable period of bargaining."[29] We do so now, addressing two different situations and drawing on Lee Lumber & Building Material Corp., 334 NLRB 399 (2001), a decision that postdates St. Elizabeth Manor, in which the Board defined a reasonable period of bargaining in the context of remedying an unlawful refusal to recognize and bargain with an incumbent union.[30]

Lee Lumber held that the bargaining period in such cases is no less than 6 months, but no more than 1 year. The determination of whether a reasonable period had elapsed after 6 months depends on a "multifactor analy-

[26] As the Supreme Court has observed, the Board is "entitled to suspicion when faced with an employer's benevolence as its workers champion against their certified union, which is subject to a decertification petition from the workers if they want to file one." Auciello, supra, 517 U.S. at 790.

[27] For example, an agreement of less than 90 days will not bar a petition, see Crompton Co., 260 NLRB 417, 418 (1982), nor will an interim agreement that is intended to be superseded by a permanent agreement, see Bridgeport Brass Co., 110 NLRB 997, 998 (1954).

[28] "[I]n representation cases, the Board has recognized a presumption in favor of applying new rules retroactively," which is "overcome . . . where retroactivity will have ill effects that outweigh 'the mischief of producing a result which is contrary to a statutory design or to legal and equitable principles.'" Crown Bolt, Inc., 343 NLRB 776, 779 (2004), quoting Levitz, supra, 333 NLRB at 729.

Petitioner Area Trades Council argues against retroactivity, citing the Board's decision in Dana, supra, which declined to apply a modification to the "recognition bar" retroactively. 351 NLRB at 443–444. Dana is easily distinguishable. As the Dana Board explained, retroactivity in that case would have destabilized many existing collective-bargaining relationships that were predicated on prior law. Id.

We see no such comparable ill effects here. It is true that some election petitions will be dismissed, and that the petitioners in those cases may have wasted some time and some effort (although those efforts might be recouped when the insulated period ends). Those consequences, however, are outweighed by the policies served by the "successor bar."

[29] In St. Elizabeth Manor, the Board explained that

> In determining whether a reasonable period has elapsed prior to the filing of a petition, the Board looks to the length of time as well as what has been accomplished in the bargaining. There is no specific cutoff; each case is determined on its own facts.

329 NLRB at 346.

[30] This analogy is apt because, as we explained above, if a successor refused to recognize the incumbent representative of its predecessor's employees and was ordered to do so by the Board, Lee Lumber would apply.

sis, which considers '(1) whether the parties are bargaining for an initial contract; (2) the complexity of the issues being negotiated and of the parties' bargaining processes; (3) the amount of time elapsed since bargaining commenced and the number of bargaining sessions; (4) the amount of progress made in negotiations and how near the parties are to concluding an agreement; and (5) whether the parties are at impasse." 334 NLRB at 402. The burden is on the General Counsel to prove that a reasonable period of bargaining had not elapsed after 6 months. Id. at 405.

First, we address the situation where the successor employer has expressly adopted existing terms and conditions of employment as the starting point for bargaining, without making unilateral changes. The "reasonable period of bargaining" in such cases will be 6 months, measured from the date of the first bargaining meeting between the union and the successor employer.

In such cases, successorship remains a destabilizing situation, but the impact on the union and the employees it represents is significantly mitigated, because the new employer has accepted the collectively bargained status quo (if not the predecessor's contract, assuming one was in effect). Accordingly, a relatively shorter insulated period seems appropriate. Cf. Road & Rail Services, 348 NLRB 1160, 1162 (2006) (applying "perfectly clear" successor test and describing attendant "stabilizing factors, . . . [which] tend to temper the uncertainty occasioned by a change in ownership").

Fixing that period at 6 months is generally consistent with the Board's analysis in Lee Lumber, where the Board drew on its own experience and on data collected by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS), to conclude that "a period of around 6 months approximates the time typically required for employers and unions to negotiate renewal collective-bargaining agreements." 334 NLRB at 402 (emphasis added). Negotiation of a renewal agreement is roughly comparable to the process of negotiating a first contract in a successorship situation where the new employer has expressly agreed to abide by existing terms and conditions of employment.

The 6-month period we establish is intended to fix a bright-line rule for such cases. That is, we will not apply the multifactor analysis of Lee Lumber in defining the "reasonable period of bargaining."

Second, we address the situation where the successor employer recognizes the union, but unilaterally announces and establishes initial terms and conditions of employment before proceeding to bargain. In such cases, the "reasonable period of bargaining" will be a minimum of 6 months and a maximum of 1 year, measured from the date of the first bargaining meeting between the union and the employer. We will apply the multifactor analysis of Lee Lumber to make the ultimate determination of whether the period had elapsed. One of those factors is "whether the parties are bargaining for an initial contract," 334 NLRB at 402, which will be the case, of course, in this successorship situation.[31] The burden of proof will be on the party who invokes the "successor bar" to establish that a reasonable period of bargaining has not elapsed.

In these cases, because the destabilizing factors associated with successorship are at their height, a longer insulated period is appropriate. The period we have chosen corresponds to the period adopted in Lee Lumber, which involved an employer's unlawful refusal to bargain. Six months, as explained, represents the approximate time required to reach a renewal agreement; 1 year is the length of the insulated period for newly-certified unions. Lee Lumber, supra, 334 NLRB at 402.

The situation here, of course, is not identical to that in Lee Lumber. The successor employer who makes unilateral changes has acted lawfully. But there is no reason to believe that the actual impact of these changes on the bargaining relationship and on employees is somehow lessened because they are legal. In Lee Lumber, the Board reiterated the view that > "when a bargaining relationship . . . has been restored after being broken, it must be given a reasonable time to work and a fair chance to succeed" before the union's representative status can properly be challenged.

334 NLRB at 401 (footnote omitted). The successorship situation, too, represents a break in the prior collective-bargaining relationship between the incumbent union and the predecessor employer, a relationship restored by the operation of successorship doctrine, which imposes a bargaining obligation on the new employer.[32]

[31] The Lee Lumber Board explained that "in initial bargaining, unlike in renewal negotiations, the parties have to establish basic bargaining procedures and core terms and conditions of employment, which may make negotiations more protracted than in renewal contract bargaining." 334 NLRB at 403 (footnote omitted).

[32] The dissent asserts that our decision results in "doubling the potential insulated period" in this second circumstance, but, in fact, in both of the above-described circumstances our decision limits what could otherwise be held to be a "reasonable period of time." That is, in both circumstances, our decision for the first time establishes maximum reasonable periods of time.

In addition to defining the "reasonable period of bargaining," we make one further modification to bar doctrines in the successorship context. We hold that where (1) a first contract is reached by the successor employer and the incumbent union within the reasonable period of bargaining during which the successor bar applied, and (2) there was no open period permitting the filing of a petition during the final year of the predecessor employer's bargaining relationship with the union, the contract-bar period applicable to election petitions filed by employees or by rival unions will be a maximum of 2 years, instead of 3.[33]

This modification will mitigate the possibility that consecutive application of the "successor bar" and "contract bar" doctrines will unduly burden employee free choice by leading to prolonged insulated periods. We leave open for decision in future cases whether any further refinements in the contract-bar doctrine are appropriate in particular successorship situations, to ensure that represented employees have adequate periodic access to the Board's election.

V.

Our decision today clearly has failed to persuade our dissenting colleague, who characterizes it as reflecting "ideological discontent with" the Supreme Court's decision in Burns, as "protecting labor unions, not labor relations stability or employee free choice," and as lacking "any reasoned explanation" for overruling precedent. Whether these criticisms are fair or not is for others to judge. We have examined the Act and its express policy goals, Board precedent, and the Supreme Court's decisions with care. We have explained our position with care. And, finally, we have read our colleague's dissent with care. It has failed to persuade us.

For all of the reasons offered here, we believe that reestablishing the "successor bar" doctrine, as modified, will further the policies of the Act. As explained, we have determined to apply the rules that we have adopted today retroactively in representation proceedings. Accordingly, we remand this case to the Regional Director for further proceedings consistent with this decision.

ORDER

The case is remanded to the Regional Director for further proceedings consistent with this decision.

[33] To the extent that it is inconsistent with our decision today, Ideal Chevrolet, 198 NLRB 280 (1972), is overruled.

In accordance with existing contract-bar principles, the employer will be prohibited from filing an election petition for the duration of the contract, whatever its length. Montgomery Ward & Co., 137 NLRB 346, 348–349 (1962).

MEMBER HAYES, dissenting.

Like a bad penny, the Keller Plastics[1] bar doctrine keeps showing up in Board successorship law. It has no place there, yet my colleagues once again bring it back in order to service the ideological goal of insulating union representation from challenge whenever possible. They pursue the same goal in overruling MV Transportation[2] here as they do in Lamons Gasket,[3] where they today overrule the modified voluntary recognition election bar policy set forth in Dana Corp.[4] As in Lamons Gasket, the majority fails to provide any reasoned explanation why the policy they advocate is preferable to the reasonable policy established in the precedent they now overrule. Indeed, they demonstrate even less reason for overruling precedent here, because their opinion is inconsistent with, and an attack on, Supreme Court precedent. Three times before,[5] the Board has rejected the attempted analogy between voluntary recognition and successorship as the premise for imposing what my colleagues refer to as a successor bar, conferring an irrebuttable presumption of majority status on a union representative at the beginning of its relationship with a Burns[6] successor employer. The Sixth Circuit, the only court of appeals to review the aberrant successor bar doctrine during brief intervals of its existence, likewise rejected its imposition, stating that "there is no reason to treat a change in ownership of the employer as the equivalent of a certification or voluntary recognition of a union following an organization drive."[7]

Undeterred by this precedent, my colleagues reimpose their successor bar, giving it the additional twist of defining a reasonable bar period as dependent upon whether a successor has exercised its legal right under Burns to set initial terms and conditions of employment different from those that existed under the predecessor employer. If the employer exercises this legal right, the irrebuttable presumption of the incumbent union's majority status could last for as much as a year, thus imposing by decisional fiat a bar of the same length that Congress statutorily provided for only following a free and fair secret ballot Board election. If not, the presumption lasts 6 months. In either event, if a contract is executed within the bar period, employees could have their right to raise a question concerning the union's continuing representative status foreclosed for as much as 4 years.

My colleagues justify their resurrection of a successor bar by characterizing its most recent repudiation in MV Transportation as a "reflexively negative reaction . . . to the possibility of doctrinal evolution." They contend that, particularly in light of evidence of an increase in the dollar volume and number of mergers and acquisitions, the successor bar doctrine deserves a fair trial. No, it does not.

It does not because the blanket imposition of an irrebuttable presumption of continuing majority status in Burns successorship situations cannot be reconciled with the Supreme Court's rationale in Burns and Fall River Dyeing Co. v. NLRB, 482 U.S. 27 (1987). In Burns, the Court affirmed the Board's holding, in accord with well-established precedent, that if a successor employer continues the predecessor's operation substantially unchanged with a work force including a majority of the predecessor's employees, then the successor must recognize and bargain with the majority-supported union that represented those employees in a collective-bargaining relationship with the predecessor. The Court indicated that the union there, which only a few months earlier had been certified by the Board as representative of the predecessor's employees, should retain the usual presumptions of continuing majority status, i.e., "almost conclusive" during the year after the election, and rebuttable thereafter.[8] However, the Court struck down the Board's attempt to depart from its own precedent and to impose on a successor employer the additional obligation to honor the predecessor's collective-bargaining agreement with the incumbent union. Among the several reasons given for rejection was that "a successor [would] be bound to observe the contract despite good-faith doubts about the union's majority during the time that the contract is a bar to another representation-election."[9] Finally, the Court held that a successor employer was in most instances free to set its own initial terms and conditions of employment prior to bargaining with the union.[10]

As mentioned, the incumbent union's presumption of majority status in Burns was irrebuttable at the time of transition because it had been certified after a Board election only a few months earlier. Fall River, like the present case, involved a longstanding bargaining relationship between the predecessor employer and incumbent union. Thus, the Supreme Court first needed to "decide whether Burns is limited to a situation where the union only recently was certified before the transition in employers, or whether that decision also applies where the union is entitled to a presumption of majority support."[11] The Court held that a successor's obligation to bargain extended to situations in which the union retained only a rebuttable presumption of majority status from its bargaining relationship with the predecessor. It observed that "[i]f, during negotiations, a successor questions a union's continuing majority status, the successor 'may lawfully withdraw from negotiation at any time following recognition if it can show that the union had in fact lost its majority status at the time of the refusal to bargain or that the refusal to bargain was grounded on a good-faith doubt based on objective factors that the union continued to command majority support.' Harley-Davidson Transp. Co., 273 NLRB 1531 (1985)."[12]

In the cited Harley-Davidson case, decided only 2 years prior to Fall River, the Board expressly overruled the first-time attempt to impose a successor bar. As in St. Elizabeth Manor, supra, the second failed attempt to impose a successor bar, the majority here describes the Fall River Court's reference to Harley-Davidson as "merely a description of the legal landscape at the time," rather than as an endorsement of the extant law expressly rejecting application of an irrebuttable successor bar regardless of the length of the antecedent bargaining relationship imposed on the successor.

I give the Supreme Court more credit than that. The Court does not rummage through its decisional attic, or ours, and randomly decide which cases to cite, and which to ignore, as mere examples of extant law. After all, Keller Plastics was part of the legal landscape when Fall River was decided, and the Court saw no need to mention that case, instead citing a case that effectively rejected application of Keller Plastics in a successor situation. So, too, was Franks Bros. extant law, venerable precedent indeed. Yet the Fall River Court failed to cite it for the principle that my colleagues repeat as mantra here and in Lamons Gasket, i.e., that "a bargaining relationship once rightfully established must be permitted to exist and function for a reasonable period in which it can be given a fair chance to succeed." This is reason enough to infer that the Court believed that the Keller Plastics and Franks Bros. principles for newly recognized unions were inapplicable to successorship situations, and that the citation to Harley-Davidson was an endorsement of Board law holding, consistent with the Supreme Court's rationale, that a union's continuing majority status with a Burns successor is entitled to no more protection than it would have had with the predecessor employer in the absence of a contract or certification year bar.

The conflict with controlling Supreme Court precedent is reason enough to preclude the Board from even considering the policy choice of the blanket imposition of a successor bar. Even if it were not, how can one possibly describe the majority's rationale as a reasonable, factually supported justification for overruling precedent?

As I note in my dissent in Lamons Gasket, my colleagues' opinions there and here are rife with rational inconsistencies, both internally and in comparison. For instance, the Dana decision was vilified in Lamons Gasket as overruling longstanding precedent. Here, the majority celebrates overruling precedent which has stood as Board law for intervals of 10, 14, and, most recently, 7 years (since MV Transportation). My colleagues' definition of when longevity of precedent is entitled to dispositive weight eludes me. If it depends on how many times a partisan shift in Board membership results in a change in the law, thus creating undesirable oscillation, then I would think any such change might give pause, whether it is the first or fifth swing of the pendulum.

Then there is the matter of a factual predicate for reviewing precedent. The majority in Lamons Gasket criticized the lack of an empirical basis for the Dana majority's grant of review of the voluntary recognition bar doctrine, even though review was based in part on a change in union organizational practices that undisputedly contributed to a significant reduction in Board elections, the statutorily preferred means of resolving questions concerning representation. Here, the majority relies on evidence of cyclical increases in mergers and acquisitions as the factual basis for reevaluating the need for a successor bar, based on the factually unsubstantiated possibility that an increase in these transactions might destabilize collective-bargaining relationships. They make this claim in spite of the fact that Supreme Court successorship law reflects no concern for the numerosity and size of mergers and acquisitions. The Court simply states where the balance of interests must be struck in each and every transaction, and what presumptions of continuing union majority status must apply, in order to stabilize collective-bargaining relationships without detriment to employer enterprise or employee free choice.[13]

Of course, this case and Lamons Gasket are consistent in at least one respect. The majority began in each case with the stated purpose of gaining empirical and experiential evidence under extant policy. When confronted with a record devoid of such evidence, they nevertheless proceed to overrule precedent as a policy choice. At bottom, what is revealed in this case about that policy choice is an ideological discontent with Burns itself. It is no secret that unions and their proponents view this decision with great disfavor. The Burns Court rejected the Board's attempt to impose on a successor employer the obligation to assume the predecessor's contract, and with it, an irrebuttable presumption of the union's majority status. Then, adding insult to injury, the Court held that a successor could ordinarily set initial terms and conditions of employment different from those of its predecessor.

The imposition of a successor bar is designed to offset Burns as much as possible by imposing for a period of time the irrebuttable presumption that would have obtained under the Board's rejected contract assumption and bar theory. If transition to the successor occurs at a time when the incumbent union had no contract with the predecessor, its rebuttable presumption of majority status is transformed into an irrebuttable presumption, giving it greater rights than it had with the predecessor. All of this is for the purpose of preventing any employee challenge to the incumbent union while it works to undo the changes that Burns permits.

There is nothing wrong with the union's attempting to do so. There is much wrong with declaring that it must be able to operate free from any electoral challenge by employees, including those who have doubts about their experience when represented by that union with the predecessor and those new employees in the predecessor's work force who have never had an opportunity to exercise their right of free choice on the question of collective-bargaining representation. The majority views with apparent horror the prospect that the incumbent union's presumption of majority status should be subject to an immediate test by the ballot box. This, they claim, would upset "stability" in the bargaining relationship. However, it is axiomatic that there cannot be a stable relationship where the incumbent no longer represents a majority of the employees in the unit. Thus, an election does nothing to disturb stability since it merely either affirms the majority upon which stability must be based, or reveals that there is no real relationship to be stabilized or maintained.

[13] The majority cites an increase in mergers and acquisitions as if, under current law, such events pose a risk to the employees' right to union representation. On the contrary, the only "risk" is to the union's incumbency, which is only put at "risk" if a sufficient number of employees raise a legitimate question about the union's continuing majority status. While that may be a risk to the union, it is a risk in furtherance of employee rights of free choice. One would do well to ask what employee rights or interests the majority's decision preserves or protects. Is it a right not to vote?

My colleagues make their purposes patently obvious by doubling the potential insulated period when a successor employer exercised its Burns right to make changes. They purport to strike a balance between occasionally competing statutory interests. In reality, they mean to strike a blow against Burns, protecting labor unions, not labor relations stability or employee free choice, by substituting an irrebuttable successor bar for the protections that the Supreme Court has denied them.

In sum, the Board, with strong judicial support, has repeatedly held that a union entering into a bargaining relationship with a Burns successor should have only a rebuttable presumption of majority status except in circumstances where a certification year begun during the bargaining relationship with the predecessor employer has not expired. I would adhere to that precedent, and I dissent from its overruling on grounds that bear no relation to its rational foundation.

Charging Party Opposition to Respondent's Exceptions to ALJ Decision

COMES NOW Charging Party, though the undersigned representative and very respectfully informs and requests as follows:

1. 1. On September 23, 2019, the undersigned attempted to file a Cross Exception to the ALJ decision relation to back pay for the nurses uniform allowance; and then file an answer in opposition to the Respondent's exceptions to the ALJ decision. Due to the fact that there was an earthquake of 6.0 intensity in Puerto Rico and severe rains and flooding from Hurricane Karen where I reside and have my office, I had to abandon my office due to the swaying of the building. Furthermore, I was without email service for some 3 hours prior to 11:30 pm and it came back briefly thereafter and then ceased to function. I did file some documents with the Executive Director's office but in a very hasty matter.

2. On September 24 or 25, I received a call from the Executive Director to inform me that my submission was lacking the first page of my opposition to Respondent's exceptions; that a 4-page document should have referenced the exception which it applied; a two page document was sent named Walter seemed have no reference to this case. I am withdrawing this document as it is not relevant for the evidence admitted in this case.
AND I also sent a complete copy of the leading case, UGL-UNICCO Service Company (August 26, 2011) 357 NLRB No. 26.

3. I was told to serve these documents on both parties (General Counsel) and Respondent and send again to the Executive Director. I stated I would try to do so expediently but I could not do so last week since for the first time I had adverse reactions to chemo-therapy for pancreatic cancer last week. I spoke with Attorney Munoz-Noya for the Respondent and Isis Ramos, Counsel for the General Counsel this week and promised my submission for today, Thursday, 3 October 2019.

`4. My exhibit 74 rebuts the Respondent's allegations about Respondent's that it was not Respondent who pain the bonus but the principal owner of Menonita Hospital de Guayama.

THE Charging Party very respectfully requests that this amended submission be accepted and be considered due to reasons stated herein and this should not prejudice the parties being served today.

On November 6, 2017, it advised the Union (Unidad Laboral de Enfermeras(os) y Empleados de la Salud) that the totality of the employees who worked at Hospital San Lucas Guayama had accepted employment with Respondent and that it was recognizing the Union as the exclusive representative of its employees in all units. The employees were organized in five (5) units; namely RN nurses, LPN nurses, Office Clerical employees, Technicians and Medical Technologists. Since about September 13,2017, Respondent became a successor to Hospital San Lucas Guayama SEE; (Joint 4) and Joint Exhibits 70(b), 17(b), 18(b), 19(b) and 20(b).

Respondent Hospital, at the time it acquired the assets of the hospital, offered an employment contract to all employees working at the hospital, employed by Hospital San Lucas Guayama and it also made an initial offer or changes of economic benefits for its employees at the time they accepted the employment contract with Respondent Hospital. See Joint Exhibits 1 O(b) and (11)b which were distributed together with the employment contract on or about September 8, 2017, also Joint Exhibit 18(b).

Amended charge: 12-CA-21S039

Respondent hospital violated the Act on or about November 2017 by granting an economic bonus to unit employees who worked September 19 & 20, 2017. It engaged in this conduct without notice nor bargaining with the Union. It also violated the Act by failing to furnish information requested by the Union in relation to the work schedules, time cards,work for its employees who worked September 19 & 20, 2017.

Union requested information regarding the bonus for September 19 & 20, 2017 and also requested that the employer informs the employees about the September 29 & 20 and the dates it discussed this bonus with employees at each department in the hospital. This information has yet to be furnished. It was later learned that this economic bonus was paid by Menonite General Hospital Inc. which is the parent company and owner of Respondent Hospital. This bonus amounted to $150.00 to each employee who worked September 19 and 20, 2017 and some 94 employees received this amount was unilaterally paid by Respondent's Hospital was in the amount of $150.00 on November 22,2017. See Joint Exhibit 21 (b). This payment was not a gratuity and in fact was based on being an incentive for those employees who worked on the two dates. It is pertinent to know that the checks were handed out to the employees by Hospital Administrator Diaz. This conduct should be charged as an unfair labor practice to both Respondent Hospital and Menonite General Hospital, Inc. since the Respondents withheld information from the Union and refused to bargain over this incentive.

This conduct was extremely harmful to the Union in that undermined the Union as the exclusive collective bargaining representative for all 5 units of the Hospital employees. In fact, what Respondent did it was to show and demonstrate to its other units employees was that it could flaunt and disregard the NLRB law and unilaterally buy the sentiments of its employees and bypass the union in a flagrant and disrespectful manner. This message was rapidly promulgated among the units employees SOon thereafter Respondent began withdrawing recognition from the Union for all of the units without having bargained nor notified to the Union changes to the terms and conditions of employment, it had recognized on November 6, 2017.

Charge 12-CA-214830 and First Amended Charge

Since about February 5, 2018, the employer has failed and refused to bargain in good faith with the Union by unilaterally withdrawing recognition from the Technicians and refusing to bargain requested on February 6, 2018. Joint Exhibit 1,#52 and #54. See also Joint Exhibit 25(b). Then, on February 6, 2018 Respondent met with employees in the Technician unit and informed then that since they were now non-union employees that they were going to receive new benefits which included a salary increase, full payment of health insurance plan and a uniform reimbursement incentive. The salary increases were granted on February 11,2018.

Respondent employer by granting benefits listed above in effect it was buying the employees support and effectively sent a message to all other units employees that they should get rid of the union and get similar benefits granted to them. This is the message designed to undermined the Union. Again it is highly relevant that there was no bargaining between the union and Respondent Hospital over the terms and conditions of employment of its Technician unit, employees prior it the withdrawal of recognition effective on February 6, 2018.

This is a gross violation of the act and shows how monies can buy a group of employees. See Joint 58 and Joint Exhibit 31 (b) as proof of this illegal conduct without bargaining.

On February 7, 2018, the Union sent a request to meet and bargain for the five units it represents among Respondent Hospital's employees. See Joint Exhibit 1, #47 and #56. Also Joint Exhibit 11(b), 12(b) and 18(b) (3 pages). See also Joint Exhibit 1, #47.

It is significant that Respondent Hospital can withdraw recognition without having bargained with the Union nor evem , without having received its proposal for the Technicians until February 12,2018 (Joint exhibits 32(b), 23(b), 34(b), 35(b), 36(b) and 37(b).

12-CA-214908 withdrew recognition from the Union represented employees without bargaining. See Joint 1, #6(b), Joint Exhibit 40(b). See Joint Exhibits.

12-CA-215040 (GC Exhibit (b)

Likewise again Respondent Hospital refused to bargain with the Union during 6 months prior to February 16,2018. This affected unit employees in the Medical Technology unit and other units. Respondent, on February 16, withdrew recognition from this unit. See Joint Exhibit 46(b). Again, there was never any bargaining between the parties over the terms and conditions of employment regarding the medical technologist unit.

12-CA-217862 was filed on April 4, 2018. In essence, the charge alleges that Respondent Hospital bargained in bad faith with this union by bypassing the union and unilaterally changing the medical care insurance coverage and premiums without notifying and bargaining with the union. Likewise it failed to provide information requested by the Union and it bargained directly with the unit employees over the medical healthcare insurance. See GC 1(a)

12-CA-218262 and 12-CA-218260 First amended on April 6, 2018. Respondent hospital withdrew recognition from the RN nurses unit, and on April 24, 2018, Respondent Hospital withdrew recognition from the Licensed Practical Nurses unit. See Joint Exhibits 59(b) and Joint Exhibit 6(b).

Again, Respondent Hospital bought its employees sentiments by reducing the medical insurance payments by 50 and giving these employees free medical insurance after May 1, 2018. This was done without bargaining with the Union. This undermined the support by the employees for the Union. Similarly the Respondent Hospital granted a $200.00 uniform bonus to the RN nurses and LPN Nurses on May 18,2018. See Joint Exhibit 64(b).

While Respondent Hospital contents this was done due to the article 7 of P.R. Law 150 of 1998 See Joint 65(b). Charging patty was not notified nor was there any bargaining with the Union over the uniform payment bonus Charging Pruty respectfully requests that back pay be made for all units employees who used uniform for the period from September 12,2017 to May 7, 2018.

Again Respondent Hospital unilaterally and without notice and bargaining with the Union, on June 1,2018 granted free medical health insurance to its LPN nurses and reduced the employees costs from 50 of the insurance premiums to zero and made the health insurance free for its LPN Nurses.

Respondent Hospital also unilaterally implemented a 12 hour shift for its RN nurses in June 2018. This again was without notice nor bargaining with the Union. There was no impasse on this issue as alleged by Respondent.

Finally, around late June and early July 2018, Respondent Hospital implemented an Employee Manual and General Rules of Conduct for its employees. See Joint Exhibits 68(b) and 69(b). The Respondent Hospital did not notify nor bargain with union over the implementation of the Employee Manual and the General Rules of Conduct. Charging party's position is that said conduct violated the Act and that the Union must be able to bargain over the Employee Manual since it spells out terms and condition of employment and likewise over the Rules of Conduct.

III. BOARD CURRENT SUCCESSOR BAR LAW PRINCIPLES

The NLRB has adopted and restored "a successor bar doctrine" and it expressly reversed MV Transportation 337 NLRB 770 (2002) *. See UCL-UNICCO SERVICE COMPANY, 357 NLRB No. 76, at page 806. Decided on August 26,2011. The Board issued its decision in this case and established two (2) defined bargaining periods under its new "successor bar doctrine" to govern bargaining between an incumbent union and a new successor employer during their bargaining. This is the current law under the NLRB its "successor bar doctrine.

In this case, the Board defined the successor bar for a definite period of time not to less than 6 months and a maximum time period not to excess one (1) year. In essence, this decision seeks to establish a reasonable 6-month period of insulated stability of bargaining for the new successor employer to meet and bargain with the incumbent union which is to be mandated by the "successor bar doctrine" established here. During this period of 6 months, the Union enjoys a conclusive presumption that the Union enjoys a majority support by the employees which prevents any challenge by the new successor employer, by employees or by a rival union. This is in line with the doctrine by the U S Supreme Court in that a bargaining relationship once rightfully established must be given a fair chance to succeed. This period of 6 months is reasonable in those cases where the successor employer agrees to abide by the existing terms and conditions of employment . See Frank Bros. Co. v. NLRB 321 U.S. 702, 703, 705 (1944). See also Lee Lumber & Bldg Materials 334 NLRB 399.

Even.with a 6- month period, the transition from one employer to a new successor employer, can lead to disestablization of collective bargaining relationships. In this sense, the new successor employer can chose to hire or not hire certain employees from the predecessor employer; it can reject any existing collective bargaining agreements; be free to establish new initial terms and conditions of employment, wages, hours, benefits, job duties, tenure, disciplinary rules, and other conditions of employment. This places labor laws in a particularly venerable position to preserve industrial peace by preserving industrial peace in the workplace .without impairing the free choice of employees. To this extent, the incumbent union must enjoy a refutable presumption for twelve (12) months without having to worry about decertification and/or by removing any temptation on the part of the new successor employer to avoid good-faith bargaining. It is scarcely conductive to bargaining in good faith for an employer to know if he dillydallies or suptly undermines the union strength may erode time fo and thereby relieve him of his statutory duties at any time. The Board, in its decision defined a reasonable period of being not less than 6 months but not more than one year total period .from the date that the parties first met and engaged in bargaining. In order to prevail, the incumbent union must present evidence that the period has not elapsed and that the union and the employer are engaged in collective bargaining

IV. FACTS RELATING TO "SUCCESSOR BAR DOCTRINE" TO THE CASE

In the instant case, the "successor bar doctrine" is applicable to the incumbent Union Unidad Laboral de Enfermeras (os) y Empleados de la Salud, hereinafter the Union, as follows"

a. The Respondent Hospital did not recognize the Union as being the exclusive collective bargaining representative for the employees in 5 units, namely: RN Nurses, LPN nurses, Office Clerical Employees, Technicians and Medical Technologists until November 6, 2017. Joint Exhibits 17 (b) and 18 (b).

b. About September 8 and September 13, 2017, Respondent Hospital recruited all the former employees of San Lucas Guayama to become employees of Hospital Menonita de Guayama, Inc. and furnished them with employment contracts and a list of initial terms and conditions of employment which they would be entitled as employees of Hospital Menonita de Guayama .. Joint Exhibits l7(b) and 18 (b).

c. Union representative Ingrid Vega met with Walesa Rodriguez to about October 20 to discuss hours of work and work shifts of 8 hours and 12 hours for certain of its employees, Respondent Hospital agree to get back to her at a later date. There was no agreement at this meeting. See also Joint Exhibits 16(b).

d. Union representative Ariel Echevarria met with Waslesca Rodriguez about October 27,2017 to discuss various complaints (grievances) from employees in different units relating to reduced hours of work and to solicit information relating to complaints ofRN Nurses about proposal to have implementation for 12 hour work shift for RN nurses.. Also to notify the hospital of an unfair Labor practice filed by the Union for failure to meet and bargain See Joint Exhibit #15 (b). No further bargaining sessions were held despite the Union's request that Respondent schedule

e. Respondent Hospital notified its employees with a letter dated September 8, 2017 that they should sign a contract to continue in same occupation and same salary and seniority by September 12, 2017 and become employees of Hospital Menonita de Guayama Inc. on September 13,2017. It also included a list ofterms and conditions of employment as page 3 of the Joint Exhibits 18 (b) letter dated 9/8/2017) and letter, 17 (b)and Joint Exhibit 20 (b) of 12 pages.

f. See Joint Exhibits 72 (b)at page 4 thereof, wherein the Respondent Hospital specifically states it will not honor any or all terms and conditions of employment with Hospital San Lucas Guayama, which have are contained in expired CBAs and/or any subsequent agreements with Hospital San Lucas, Guayama, .which may be pending. g. In or about November 22,2017. by its parent company, Menonita General Hospital Inc., who is also the owner of Respondent Hospital, paid a $150.00 bonus to certain of the employees ofHozpital Menonita de Guayama, Inc. to compensate said employees who stayed working on the nights of September 19 and 20, 2017 when Hurricane Maria devastated Puerto Rico as a category five (5) storm. Joint Exhibit 21 (b), which reflects a payment of$150 each to some 94 employees. It is pertinent to note that these monies were to compensate employees who worked on these two dates at the hospital while Hurricane Maria was passing .through Guayama, PRo There was no bargaining nor notification to the union over this bonus and it was paid on November 22,2017. Despite the Union requesting information about this matter and about the bonus pa;yment Respondent Hospital kept this information secret and did not bargain over this matter with the Union. See Joint Exhibit 21 (b)

. V. RESPONDENT HOSPITAL'S REFUSES TO BARGAIN WITH THE UNION AND ENGAGES IN CONDUCT TO UNDERMINE THE UNION

h. About February 5, 2018, Respondent Hospital refused to bargain and over the terms and conditions of employment of its Technicians Unit employees and on that same date it withdrew recognition of the Union as the exclusive collective bargaining representative of its Technicians. See Joint Exhibit 25 (b).

i On February 6,2018, Respondent Hospital held a meeting with its Technician and informed them that since they were no longer represented by the Union, that they were going to receive salary increases, full payment of their medical insurance plan premiums and a uniform reimbursement incentive payment. This meeting was attended by Rogelio Diaz, Administrator, Walesca Rodriguez, Human Resources Director, and Legal Advisor, Mario Prieto and most of the Technicians. Joint Exhibit 1, page 10, paragraph 54, stipulation of facts.

j. About February 7, 2018, the Union requests Respondent Hospital that it give dates for bargaining with the Union for all ofthe units employees of the Hospital. Joint Exhibit 29 (b).

k. On this same date, Respondent Hospital requested that the Union submit its proposals for the following units: Medical Technologists, RN nurses, LPN nurses and Office Clerical employees. Joint Stipulation of Facts, at, page 1, paragraph 57.

l. On February 11, 2018, Respondent Hospital granted salary increases to its Technicians. See Joint Exhibit 31 (b) which reflects the salary per hour adjustments for its Technicians. It should be noted that this salary increase amounted to some $0.75 to $1.00 per hour in most cases. At no time did Respondent Hospital notify the union of its intention to grant this salary increase nor did it bargain with the Union over the benefits that it was offering to the employees in the Technician Unit. Page

m. There is no doubt that these substantial salary increases and other promised benefits were used by Respondent Hospital to entice other units employees to abandon the Union and undermine the union support and BUY (my emphasis) the other employee complements.

There is no doubt that this unlawful conduct worked since Respondent Hospital then began to withdraw recognition from the Union for the Office Clerical unit employees on February 14,2018. See Joint Exhibit 40 (b).

n. Respondent Hospital's next move was to withdraw recognition from the Union from its Medical Technologist unit employees on February 16,2018. See Joint Exhibit 46 (b).

o. Respondent Hospital continued its unlawful campaign to undermine the Union by trying to exaggerate the time period used by the Union which were furnished on February 12, 2018. The Union then complained about the Respondent's using 2 months to review the proposals without scheduling meetings for bargaining.

p. Respondent Hospital continued its unlawful conduct by scheduling an orientation with all of its employees about the Menonita Medical Plan and it coverages and costs to the employees. Respondent did not bargain over the choice of the Medical Plan with the Union nor coverages available. See Joint Exhibit 53 (b). This was followed by the Respondent then imposing a payment of medical insurance plan to those employee who were still unionized and by giving the medical plan free to all employees who were not represented by the Union. This unlawful conduct by Respondent continued in order to break the back of the Union by causing those employees pertaining to the RN Nurses unit and LPN Practical Nurses unit to have to pay for the medical plan insurance while other units employees who were withdrawn from recognition had free medical plan insurance. See Joint Exhibits 55 (b) and 57 (b).

q. On April 1, 2018, Respondent Hospital granted free medical insurance for employees in the Technicians, Office Clericals, Medical Technologists which resulted in a saving of 50 of the cost of the insurance plan since these employees were in units for which the Respondent has withdrawn recognition, supra. Respondent did not notify nor bargain with the r. On April 6, 2018, Respondent Hospital then withdrew recognition from Union for the the RN Nurses. This unit has the largest number of employees, some 109 employees. See Joint Exhibits 59 (b) and 60 (b).

s. On April 18,2018 the Respondent Hospital sent its proposal for the LPN nurses to the Union. See Joint Exhibit 61. It should be noted that in its proposals, the LPN Nurses would still have to pay part of the costs for the medical plan which was free to all other non-union units.

t. On April 24, 2018 Respondent Hospital withdrew recognition for LPN Nurses and so notified the Union. See Joint Exhibit 62 (b).

V. APPLICATION OF BOARD LAW TO THE FACTS.

The Respondent Hospital failed to bargain in good faith with the Union. It did not recognize the status of the Union being insulated for at least 12 months where its majority status cannot be questioned. Rather, Respondent began to seek manner to undermine the Union's majority status from the very beginning. While it offered employment to all employees of its predecessor[1] on about September 8 and 13, 2017, it did not recognize the Union until November 6,2017. Additionally, Respondent Hospital did not accept to keep the existing tel IDS and conditions of employment and it chose to make new conditions and terms of employment.. Likewise, it engaged in dillydally tactic in order to undermine the Union's support among the units employees and it rejects all prior agreements. By doing so, it was gaining time to plan and execute conduct to undermine the Union. Part of the tactics were to offer monetary changes favorable to the units employees and not notify and bargain with the unions over these conditions of employment. This was done in a very calculated manner and kept the union out of the circle to be able to bargain with the hospital. Despite the Union requesting bargaining and meetings, only 2 informal meeting were held on October 20 and 27, 2017. No bargaining meeting were held after these meetings. Respondent had not even recognized the Union at that time, rather Respondent wanted to get certain concessions from the Union at that time. In February 2018, Respondent began to withdraw recognition from the Union since it had violated the successor bar and was undermining the Union and not observing the Union's protected status under the successor bar doctrine. By April 2018, it had withdrawn recognition from the Union and had granted generous benefits and monetary compensations to the units employees. This conduct was conduct to undermine the Union. Part of the tactics were to offer monetary changes favorable to the units employees and not notify and bargain with the unions over these conditions of employment. This was done in a very calculated manner and kept the union out of the circle to be able to bargain with the hospital. Despite the Union requesting bargaining and meetings, only 2 meeting were held on October 20 and 27, 2017. No bargaining meetings were held after those initial meetings. Respondent had not even recognized the Union at that time, rather Respondent wanted to get certain concessions from the Union at that time. In February 2018, Respondent began to withdraw-recognition from the Union since it had violated the successor bar and was undermining the Union and not observing the Union's protected status under the successor bar doctrine. By April 2018, it had withdrawn recognition from the Union and had granted generous benefits and monetary compensations the the units employees. There can be no doubt that the Respondent Hospital did buy the employees sentiments and gave generous terms and conditions of employment to groups of employees to entice the others to abandon the union and flaunt the Board Law and disregard the principles set forth in ULG-UNICCO. 357 NLRB No 76; August 26.2011.

VII. CONCLUSIONS

This conduct was unlawful and must be remedied by extending the bargaining period at least one year, make a finding back pay for periods of time when Respondent did not comply with paying uniform allowances and other allowances to its employees. A firm order should issue requiring the Respondent bargain in good faith with the Union and meet in regular sessions to see and if good bargaining can be instituted. This and that such other remedies be ordered to erase the scars of the gross undermining conduct that the unfair labor practices remedies be such to make fair plat for all parties. The undersigned reserves the right to present evidence should there be any ruling that would permit receipt of evidence rejected by the ALJ.
